Saltwater fishing is much more varied than freshwater fishing. One can fish from the beach or a boat, just like the option of fishing from the shore or a boat in fresh water fishing, but there are many different kinds and sizes of fish when compared to a stream, lake or pond. The type of reels are the same as fresh water fishing too, but the type of spinning or fly rod you would use to fish for a grunt versus a sailfish would be quite different in their size and build.

If you have access to a beach where you can fish from, this is the easiest way to get introduced to salt water fishing. The amount of gear and preparation can be kept to a bare minimum, at least when compared to what you might need if you were fishing from a boat.

There are a lot of differences between tropical waters, like what you would find in the Caribbean or Gulf of Mexico, and areas along much of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Even so, fishing is something that is readily accessible to a wide range of different fisherman because the type of boats that can be used.

Most people that want to go deep sea fishing and need help opt to charter a boat. You pay someone to take you fishing and they provide all that you will need: a boat, fishing tackle, knowledge of where to go and the techniques to use. They will even help clean what you catch if you are lucky enough to catch a big fish.
